

Spanish Cataloging Hands-On Workshop

Presented by the Access, Collections and Technical Services Section, and co-sponsored by the Northern California Technical Processing Group

The proliferation of Spanish language materials and Latino populations in California has created a great need for Spanish catalogers in both public and academic libraries. Public libraries, in particular, are inundated with both media materials and print materials in Spanish. There are also numerous backlogs of print materials in Spanish in academic libraries that need attention. In addition, rules for cataloging Spanish materials are unique in many ways, for example, the choice of entry element for Spanish surnames and devising uniform titles for translations.

Attendees do not need to know Spanish, but should have some basic or beginning cataloging, and knowledge of US MARC 21. By the end of the class, participants will be able to catalog a provided item in Spanish. They will also receive citations to resources for cataloging foreign language materials.

The workshop will be presented by Lynne Fields, faculty librarian at Southern Illinois University, Edwardsville and longtime cataloging instructor for OCLC classes nationwide. Refreshments included.
